

DC ARCHAEOLOGY MONTH

Archaeology plays a big part in telling the stories of the places we visit, like Kalorama Park in Washington, DC. The park is the former home of John Little, who enslaved 13-17 people, including Hortense Prout.

Legend

- 1888 Little property
- 2024 map of Kalorama Park
- Former mansion of John Little
- Former outbuilding on Little's property

Learn More!

Hortense Prout became one of the last people to try to free herself from slavery in DC during the Civil War. Now, John Little's property is a public park, and Hortense's story connects us to the history of Kalorama Park. Archaeology can help us discover and protect the stories of people and places in our neighborhoods.